TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN:

There is no swimming in Glenn Flint Lake. Attached is a copy of the rules and regulations for the use of Glenn Flint Lake. There is a “no swimming” sign posted at the boat ramp. The boat ramp is the only public access to the lake. Only the person and their accompanying guests who have paid a fee to access the lake from the boat ramp, or have rented a post or dock in front of their property, are allowed on Little Walnut’s lake buffer area. Anyone else is trespassing. The district has communicated with IDNR conservation officers to assure them that the district requests trespassers be ticketed and will assist in any manner to prosecute offenders to the fullest. Signs have been posted near the VanBibber Lake Conservancy District wastewater treatment plant in the past, but those have been removed by vandals every time. In trying to solve the problem, the Little Walnut board requested VanBibber to fence off the area last year.

Glenn Flint Lake is a flood control structure. With the varying water levels of the lake as the structure operates, underwater debris such as limbs and trees move through the lake on a regular basis. Therefore, no swimming or wading is allowed in any area of Glenn Flint Lake.
